Scavo warns of tricks and treats

Sgt. Russell Scavo, on duty officer for the Carbondale Police Department, says that Halloween should be fun, but he warned against those who plan on running that fun. Using Halloween time as an excuse for causing trouble and damaging property is wrong, the juvenile sergeant noted.

It's usually only "10 percent" of those trick-or-treating who create problems for the other 90 percent, Scavo added.

Normally, the juvenile officer said, those 10 percent can find themselves in for a little trouble, too, if they are caught.

Property damage, he explained, is classified as criminal mischief. Those caught can be prosecuted.

If the damage is under $500, the crime is listed as a summary offense for which the wrongdoer can be fined up to $500 plus costs.

For damages over the $500 figure, the charges are increased and the person guilty of criminal mischief (mischief) may become guilty of a crime carrying higher penalties.

And parents, the police sergeant continued, can be held liable for what their children do.

Parents sending their children out trick-or-treating should ask their children some questions before letting them out.

They should know where their children are going, with whom they are going, so their companions will be what ones they will travel with, what they plan to do, and who will watch them.

Young children, he stressed, should have supervision.

Children should be warned not to dash into streets; motorists have trouble seeing children at night and dusk is actually a time when visibility is even worse.

Motorists should also take note that most children wear out down on their vision!

Reflective strips

Since trick-or-treating does take place after sunset, computers should be dressed in light-colored costumes or, if they can't, they should wear reflective strips to aid drivers to see them.

Parents should also check that costumes are not too loose, running falls. Other costumes of Halloween are improper, fitted shoes and large trunks or coats.

Reflective strips, today's often omitted safety device, can be even when they are dangerous.

Parents are warned that some treats may contain some hidden dangers; razor blades in apples, pins in candy, ticks in popcorn, poison in popcorn, etc.

These safety tips and others, Sgt. Scavo said, are contained in a booklet, "Trick-or-Treat Safely," which he has, in the past, distributed to youngsters in the lower grades at city elementary schools.
